

[REDACTED]
MONTICELLO, N.Y 12701

Nov. 7, 1994

C-Span

400 North Capitol St. NW

Suit 650

Washington, DC 20001

Viewer Programming

I have watch C-Span's call in show for a few years. I enjoy C-Span very much. I like everyone of your host. I have learn a lot; I have learn that most people that call in, are arrogant about some things, about the real facts and truth.

You have had many shows about the budget, taxes, entitlements and programs that service the needs of the people. Many people blame these things for the increase in the budget and higher taxes. Although these things are part of the over all budget, they do not increase the budget or cause higher taxes. What the people do not understand is, that these remain more, 1991. 2.

They by them selves do not cause any action, unless a force from outside causes action in them. I like to add what is called the recession to this principle that takes place in all things. That is nothing happens unless it is done by people, outside of natural forces.

The budget, taxes, programs and entitlements are all more, they just don't increase of their own, there has to be a force from outside to cause action in these things. That force from the outside are the people, nothing happens unless it is cause by the people. There are two actions cause by the people that cause the increase in the budget and taxes. These two actions are wages and prices. When people's wages are increase, this causes the action of the price to increase. The increase in prices have to increase, so that the employer can stay in business and to be able to pay the increase wages. Prices go up 4+5 times.

3.

The problem is not that wages go up, the problem is how fast and how much they go up. When these things happen too fast, this causes the value of the money to decrease and this can lead to a depression.

Wages and prices have to be controlled by the government to a certain point, to keep a depression from happening. It is the people who cause their own problem. Wages have gone up too fast and too much, and that causes the prices to go up so high, that people are getting less and less for their money. This also increases the budget, because the increase in prices, it cost the government more to operate. No matter how much you cut in programs and entitlements, it's always going to cost the government more to operate, just as long as wages and prices go up. You can only control spending to a certain point, then the outside force causes more spending. The only way to control spending is to control wages and prices and this has to be from top to bottom.

4

The reason for writing this is to ask why people never bring these things up. The problems we have are not because of things themselves, it is the people that create their own problems by what they do. Otherwise everything remains the same.

I hope you that will ask some questions about the issues I have raised to your guest. Thank you!

Sincerely,

