I like C-Span because every program is a compliment to the viewer.

It treats us as rational human beings, with the ability to think and choose, and make up our own minds. I never get the feeling that the program is trying to sell me something: a point of view, an idea, or a cause.

C Span just lets you see the picture and hear the relevant facts, and doesn't try to grasp your emotions by sensationalizing every incident just in order to insure the viewers attention.

The coverage of the rape case without editorial comment, of the Iowa caucus, of the day at a newspaper, and the talk shows, all pay us the tribute of showing what is going on, hearing what people are saying, and then acknowledging that we have the ability to make our own conclusions without prompting and guidance from the reporters or hosts.

C-Span understands its job; to convey the news and not to create it.

Sincerely,
