RE: Time spent with the Wall Street Journal

Dear Mr. Lamb,

Once again, I am compelled to write to you to vigorously protest the apparent bias that is creeping into many of C-SPAN's broadcasts. I have seen your reaction to this type our criticism--abruptly hanging up on callers who question your integrity or just want to let you know how many of us are feeling out here and I hope you at least read this letter.

What have I seen this morning? Bob Dole's self-serving press conference calling for a Congressional investigative panel to investigate Whitewater. I despise this guy and his hypocrisy, but I he is entitled to his opinions.

What I object to, is that following this barrage of innuendo and smear from Dole, what do you air? Another hour of pompous and pious debris from the Wall Street Journal, with the two reporters adding their own smear and innuendo on Whitewater. Gee, I'm glad you think the WSJ is such a paragon of insight and objectivity, Mr. Lamb.

Are you kidding me? They've had an ax to grind against Clinton since the election and in the guise of showing us all how a newspaper operates, you give them three days inch to spew all sorts of garbage at the President. What next? 3 days with the Washington Times? Why not more time for the American Spectator?

All I ask is, where is your balance? You get self-righteous when your integrity is questioned, but you don't seem willing to look at what you're doing.

I've loved C-Span for it's fairness, even when I don't like what I hear. But recently it seems that all I'm getting from you is one side of every issue that deals with the President. You've become an adjunct to Rush Limbaugh for God's sake. And look at the calls that praise you...they're all from Clinton bashers who you seem to be making very happy these days.

Stop the denial, Mr Lamb and restore some balance and fairness in your programming.

Sincerely,
