

I watch "C-Span" because:

"C-Span" has provided information that I have previously not known. Media bias contributes to this. For instance; the extent to which Libya's Kadafy has been involved in spreading terrorism into other parts of the world, specifically, into the United States. This involved threatening Libyan students in our country who opposed him.

Having the opportunity to hear the former American wife of King Hussein speaking in the United States and providing Jordan's point of view of the middle east tensions.

The Congressional hearings and discussions provide an insight into why it takes so long to get things done in this country, leading one to believe that there must be room for improvement. Nevertheless, the discussions are informative and helpful in formulating one's own opinion.

The call-in program is also excellent but I find myself wishing I could call in with a question. The timing of these call-in's has somehow eluded me to date.

The diversity of information provided in the various panel discussions should help one to be better informed and enable one to participate intelligently in corresponding with our Congressmen and Senators.

Being a veteran of World War II and a senior citizen I am impressed by the improvements that have been made in mass communications. However, we cannot communicate trust to our primary adversary, that is why I would like to hear a discussion on "C-Span" for exploiting the possibility of sharing our space defense program with Russia. At this high level of achievement instilling trust in each other could escalate into mutual friendship and subsequent efforts at deescalating other problem areas and bringing about a realistic renaissance of peace on earth and goodwill among all men and nations. Such an effort might be our last real chance of proving our sincerity without compromising our honor.

"C-Span" has instilled a greater interest in our government at a critical time in our history and in this election year. Please continue to focus that spotlight on the heartbeat of America.

Respectfully,
