If you have had a call-in program recently, I missed it, but you may not have allowed my questions on the air anyway.

Every time I see something about Starr, I think of all the women he has hanging around him, traveling from place to place, seemingly eager for the spot light. Are they all wealthy enough for the clothes, grooming, rooms, meals and other travel expenses? Does Starr pay it all? Or, as a lot of people suspect, does a group of Republicans pay for an outcome that would be pleasing to them? For all we know, Starr could be on Saddam's payroll. He could be thinking that Clinton's downfall would get the inspectors out of his country. Also, if that young woman kept a dirty dress all this time, then this big plan must have started a long time ago. Does the dress belong to Monica or one of the other women? If Starr just wanted the truth, why did only the girls and a mother get the immunity. Why not Clinton too. What ever happened to personal privacy?

If some members of the Republican party has instigated this disgraceful behavior, it could only be prompted by jealousy of the good Clinton has done, which in turn has earned the peoples' love for him. Back in the campaigning days, Clinton talked endlessly about things he wanted to get done for the people and the country, but all we heard from Dole was "my arm, poor me". So interfering with the President's efforts to run out country is not patriotic, in my opinion.

And speaking of that brings up something else. I have always heard that any attempt to interrupt or interfere with government fall under the heading of treason. So why isn't Starr in jail? It seems strange to me that when there is a threat to our Country from another country, Americans are up in arms, but they will sit back and let the likes of Starr insult and belittle the character of our President. I can respect those Senators and Representatives who have told the world they believe in the President and have told the court hounds to "get on with it so we can get back to work". They look and sound so clean and self respecting. A hearty and sincere THANK YOU to each of them.

As for those women, I wonder if all this started because one or more tried to flirt with our handsome President and he ignored them. Why shouldn't he ignore them. He has a beautiful and very intelligent wife and a lovely daughter growing up. That is something else about Starr. If he really believed in this thing he is doing, he could have kept it quiet and not embarrass Mrs. Clinton and their daughter. Instead he seemed to be more interested in public approval for himself. He did not even consider the reputation damage for the women.

If Starr likes to hang horns on Presidents, why didn't he scream to the world about John Kennedy's widely publicized affairs with other women? Some news reporters said his party guests ran around the White House naked. He was also said to have sent his plane to California periodically to bring the movie star to the White House. Where was Starr then? Maybe Clinton does not have such exciting parties and the instigators of this investigation wants someone in who will.

Well.....WE THE PEOPLE voted this President to the office and I want---along with many, many others-----the Crappers to back off. Those old Washington politicians had better put their sex pills away because after this mess, there is no telling which young "partner" will come forward with tales!!! There is quite a bit of talk going around now, in whispers, of course, so far!!

I tuned in too late to call in but I want to say I agree with the two women who spoke about the investigation. I agree that any investigating should be done before nominations, and after they are elected, back off.

I agree with the one who said if they are going to investigate one, do so with the others in Washington. You cannot clean one corner of the room and leave the rest dirty.

I agree with whoever said there are more important issues to be discussed than what any one particular person does in their spare and private time. That comes under the heading of gossip.

It seems that ever since "they" pulled one President down, the bug bit them. They want to show the world they can be important too, but I say they are nothing but bugs. If they had any intelligence at all, they would allow the elected people do the job they were put in office for. The current bugs not only want to destroy the President but also the Attorney Genral. They don't seem to care that they are destroying girls reputations too. Wonder how they would feel if one of the girls was a daughter. Well, the President has a daughter too.

Several people have said they think Gingrich fully expects to wind up in the oval office. He was beside Dole all through the campaigns and whispering to him. I said then that if Dole was elected, Gingrich would be the power behind the throne.

Honest men have the bad habit of thinking others around them are as honest as they are.

And John Gizzi, it isn't a bigger scandale than Watergate, it's just juicier, and that is what people like to chew on without ceasing.
