I work at home on a computer and have C-SPAN on TV as background all day. and often, into the night.

I much admire your policy of giving equal balance to the various political views over time. However, of late, I have noted the same policy being used on the "Events in the News" and the "Journalists Round Table" programs, which are my favorites.

This has been caused by substituting editorialists for journalists on these programs resulting in political debates between the participants based on their own political beliefs rather than a neutral discussion on the news events which, I believe, we should demand, and usually get, from true journalists.

While these poormen's "Cross Fire" programs might be "good TV" I strongly suggest you leave them to the commercial networks, or, at least, assign them to other call-in shows and return these two programs to the format of having true journalists discuss the news.
