Dear Brian:

For some time I have had an idea I think is worth consideration.

The Congressional Handbook is so helpful, it occurs to me that a handbook, listing Washington Bureaus of all news media (print, telly and radio) plus think tanks and other groups that have representatives that appear on C-SPAN, would be equally, if not more helpful.

It would also be helpful to include some pertinent information along with the listings, i. e. to include name of bureau chief &c, information on how and by whom <sup>ppor</sup> supported, along with number of members and when established.

This would give us a lot of insight when trying to assess the importance of what these representatives say.

This has been on my mind for some time, but the thing that made me decide to pass along the suggestion now is that man who brought the suit against Hillary Clinton heading up the Health Care task force. I can't remember his name, but as I recall, this group was small (less than 1000 members nation wide - but how much less we don't know) nor do we know when this man formed this organization. All of this info is worth knowing.

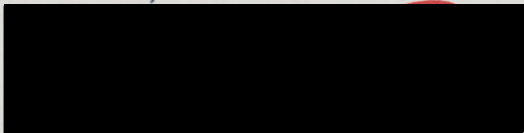

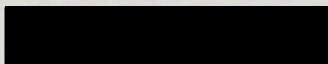

So-o-o I do hope you will give this idea some serious consideration.

Meanwhile - I, almost daily, continue to marvel at what a nifty job you do with interviews, book reviews et al. You truly are the greatest!

Press on,
