Dear Mr. Lamb,

Without question, your "Journalists' Roundtable" is the best program on television. I enjoy listening to the comments and questions of callers around the country. C-SPAN is the only network that doesn't seem to screen out callers.

I especially enjoy intelligent questions that put high-minded journalists on the spot. I have seen some of them squirm on your show when asked about the Council on Foreign Relations and the Trilateral Commission. If the media is getting tired of questions about these organizations then they better start answering them instead of dismissing their importance. I'd like to know why journalists are so cowardly in this area. I wish that journalists who are so willing to express their views on most subjects are more open and honest about this one.

I also want to compliment you Mr. Lamb. You are the only moderator I have seen who can ask intelligent questions and keep a program moving without bringing your personal biases into the discussion. I hope C-SPAN never changes!

Sincerely,
