Dear Brian,

The appearance of Crispin Sartwell on your broadcast really raised the ire of my wife and daughter Lori age 22. His admission of blowing up a backhoe in Chevy Chase at age 16 was profound, especially when he did not admit this to the authorities or to the owner of that very expensive machine. I own 2 of them at a cost of $60,000 each. I would have him in jail now for that act even years later. To think this Creature is in the teaching profession is alarming in and of itself, but not surprising. Many whackos of the 60's are in the profession and I've heard several of them at local Colleges. I wonder if his mother who now knows he destroyed the machine will demand - he pay for it now, or at least make the attempt to find the owner. Good Lord, the Teaching profession is at an all time low. That man is unbalanced now, just look into his eyes. He sees Hollywood as no blame, video violence as no blame, etc. So typical of a 60's throwback which many are in media today. "Do not touch the 1st amendment, but we can destroy the 2nd" policy. He does not blame Marilyn Manson but a concert by him in this City caused a near riot, after his show. True, not all kids are influenced, but a good many are. That's all it takes. Go to a "bang" dance and see what takes place. Even the Patriot Quarterback and his defensive linemen got in deep trouble for diving into the crowd and injuring a woman.

Why? Because the atmosphere and the mode of action to this genre were the instructors, as is Marxon and his ilk. This Sartwell fella has a pause about paying for the backhoe now? And he teaches ethics? Good God, he is sick.

What does it take to acquire a professorship? One Cheerios b4top?

When a caller asked if he would consider paying the owner of the backhoe, he looked puzzled. That said it all. A true role model for brains hell I must.
