

January 11, 1994

Brian Lamb
C-Span
400 N. Capitol St. NW
Suite 650
Washington, DC 20001

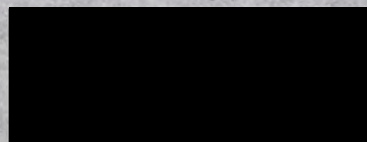

Dear Brian:

It appears the natives are getting restless out here in la-la land judging from some of the calls you've been getting re possible over-exposure to conservative elements in your programming. That little old lady from Ohio shook everybody up and frankly, I quite enjoyed her in-put.

It is possibly safe to say that the majority of your audience consists of "old persons" which after all isn't all bad. We fought a great war, then paid for it and ensuing fruitless debacles. When that mediocre actor came into office in 1980 we changed parties, little knowing that his terms would be as disastrous as we even felt they would be. Of course it should have been no surprise with Nancy just saying no with the help of her astrologist with Ronnie napping through eight years of letting everybody else run the show.

Your presentation of Wall Street Journal personnel may be commendable but I think we will pass. Since about 30 percent of our income goes for health care, the best in the world according to many great minds whose health care is free, we can't afford that expense, depending on USA Today a day late and US News & World Report. In any case the WSJ does represent the special interests of the wealthy which we just aren't. It would definitely be refreshing and amazing if the media in general could stop beating up on this smart young man who is trying to do some damage control. I'd like to say grow up to all of you but that would be insulting. Having not said that, how about suggesting that all these ivory tower folks start earning their salaries and facing up to the desperate trouble we're in out here? With all the help Bill and Hillary Clinton are getting from Rush Limbaugh, Pat Robertson and other special interest groups including labor unions which have priced themselves into NAFTA, some earnest effort to support and give some small respect to this president might be appropriate. I'd love to call but I can't afford it.

Yours truly,

A black rectangular redaction box covering the signature of the sender.

Perry, FL 32347

ALLAHASSEE, FL 323
FM
11 JAN
1994

Brian Lamb
C-Span
400 N. Capitol ST. NW Suite 650
Washington, DC 20001

