C-Span,
Washington D.C.

I watch C-Span because I always liked to be well informed and I think the best thing for that is to gather different opinions, especially from specialists.

In your Press Conferences you let us know about the public opinion in general with no attachments, which makes it interesting and satisfactory. In political issues we learn about different parties opinions, helping us making our decisions on how to vote and in other issues in general makes us understand better how and why the people think in matters like economics, sociology, politics and about how the governmental agencies handle different issues that always help make up your mind with better judgement.

I am not good at remembering names, but another thing I like to watch C-Span is because everyone in the station manages its part quite well, making the program still more approaching.

I could go on elaborating around these matters, but I think it is better, like in all activities, to give a short straightforward answer that doesn't lead to confusion or unnecessary repetitions.

Sincerely,
