

Good evening,

To get to the point, I have three questions:

1. Is there any substantial difference between "Red" China and the China of the "Mandate of Heaven"?
2. Is there any attempt to "universalize" one of the dominant languages of China to China as a whole? (Through, for instance, television, or through the educational system?)
3. And, last and simplest, do the Chinese people still think of their country as the "Middle Kingdom"?

Thank you,

Good evening,

To get to the point, I have three questions:

1. Is there any substantial difference between "Red" China and the China of the "Mandate of Heaven"?
2. Is there any attempt to "universalize" one of the dominant languages of China to China as a whole? (Through, for instance, television, or through the educational system?)
3. And, last and simplest, do the Chinese people still think of their country as the "Middle Kingdom"?

Thank you,

