Dear Sir:

C-Span is certainly in a position to educate the voting public on the issues by presenting programming in the best interest of this country and its citizens.

My comment and first correspondence with C-Span pertains to your journalists roundtable discussion today. I am totally disgruntled that you would allow such an unbalanced situation to occur. The table was not round at all. It was a totally one sided discussion by two lady correspondents without the intelligence to even partially recognize their favoritism to Clinton and the liberal cause.

There is no wonder that they fail to see the biased approach being taken by the entire media in the coverage of past events pertinent to this election and the present campaign if they can not even begin to recognize and throttle their personal view. Ms. Gorman was even mystified that she was not seemed to be welcomed at the Republican Convention.

During this program, a lady caller, perhaps elderly and in tears, simply responded to this shambles "there is no longer any love for this country". No one claimed to understand her words. I did exactly. I think all heard her comment. There seems to be a rising tide for negatism of this country and the hundreds of years of successful values and mores that have promoted our greatness.

I think C-Span has a responsibility to promote balance-not in toto but for any studio initiated programing. Most people see bits and pieces and cannot watch C-Span continuously to acquire a balanced scheme of things for which I realize you strive. I am beginning to subscribe to the notion that Republicans spend the majority of their time fretting that the voting public will not understand while Democrats spend equal time fretting that the voting public will understand.

Sincerely,
