Clinton's credibility

The other day, George Stephanopoulos, Clinton's mouthpiece, had a rough time trying to defuse the credibility crisis arising from the new administration's reversals over campaign promises.

Stephanopoulos declared as untrue the charge that Clinton promised a middle class tax cut. However, in the last presidential debate held in Lansing, Mich., Clinton not only promised the tax cut but said he would go so far as to recommend spending cuts to secure it.

Are there any voters out there who still wonder why Clinton is nicknamed "Slick Willie"?

Cheers to C-SPAN

I have become addicted to C-SPAN. After many years of news media's gymnastics in doling out their biased opinions, we get a breath of fresh air.

C-SPAN gives excellent coverage to Common Cause, Heritage, and the Brookings Institute the news media rarely ever mentions.

Their's is a Herculean effort to inform the public. Brian Lamb, one of C-SPAN's very professional people is truly a model to other who perform in that role. A smile, a sneer or a questionable look are all too familiar to those viewers who watch Sam Donaldson, Dan Rather and Peter Jennings, to mention only a few. Their questions always accompany a prosecutor's look.

Keep up the good work, C-SPAN. My Con Ed bill goes up, but so does my knowledge.
