Dear Mr. Lamb:

It is perfectly fine that yesterday you emphasized Mrs. Vince Foster's interview in the current New Yorker, a Clinton-friendly magazine. It is not fine, however, that you have never featured the many journalists who have raised serious questions about Foster's death. He was, after all, a high official of the United States Executive Branch.

This is not a matter that should be based on "feelings." Fifty five percent of the public do not feel certain it was a suicide. One can think of many reasons why Mrs. Foster would want to accept the suicide theory and she is not a law enforcement person.

Your shows have been biased lately. You are spiking serious questions on the Clintons and your journalists are mostly liberals. Yesterday you led with Charlie McDowell and this morning Albert Eisele!

Why not bring in Chris Ruddy,
Jim Davidson, Reed Swine, Robert Novak, Dan Burton, John Crudele
and others to specifically discuss Foster and Whitewater? Then you can truly show balance.

Sincerely,
