To Whom It May Concern (sure):

Well dressed, well paid, and glib members of the media alternate on your talk shows with well dressed, well paid and glib politicians to tell us (the audience) what we do think or should think on all "issues".

Why do I never see "myself" on your programs? Are there no people outside the media or politics that are informed and articulate enough to express an opinion?

Don't you get the feeling too that most of your audience believes it's on the outside looking in? Not only don't we get to cash checks in the House Bank or buy coke in the House Post Office but we don't get a chance to say anything about it. You certainly can not feel that the audience access to the platform via your call-in line(s-?) is in balance with the access of the mavins of the media and the politicians.

Is there no concern at all at CSPAN that the same people over and over again get to frame and discuss the "issues"?

Sincerely,
