

I spoke with you (Wattenberg) via the C-SPAN show of yesterday regarding Clincest, the movie Dave, and the movie's mention of the Tri-Lateral Commission.

As you may remember from my question, this is the second time I have called-in when Ms. Swain's program was centered around connections within the White House. Both times I asked about the commission, and both times the subject was avoided by the panelist. In my judgment of the reactions of Ms. Swain, you, and the previous panelist, it seems the topic is too "hot" to handle in a public forum while being worthy enough fodder for a mainstream movie. And, this judgment only serves to give credibility to the notion that media allow silence to sustain this dubious organization.

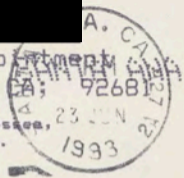

I realize that you have no way of knowing my background, but with an open mind I have been unsuccessful in trying to refute this notion since during the election. (I called Swain, no reply.) I would appreciate a response from you: "What's the big deal?"
