Dear Brian,

I like the programs C-SPAN shows which deal with life in Russia now. The Evening News and especially Brian Lockman's series on Daily Life in the USSR. Seeing how ordinary Russians live is interesting and will help people see why aid is needed for these people - they have much in common with Americans. Seeing the Nazarov family - the two elderly people in rural Russia - was especially interesting to me. Imagine the conditions that they have lived through - imperial times, Russian Revolution, civil war, Stalin, 2 world wars, and now the end of the USSR. I would like to have a follow up on them if it were possible for the translator in the series to go back to visit them. I saw a program with him when he was in the USA and heard him talk about returning.

I would like to see Judy Shelton from the Hoover Inst. on again. It seems she was the first American to realize how bad economic conditions in the USSR were.

Do you plan to return the former USSR this year anytime? Are any other programs from there being planned. I wish there were a CSPAN III available which aired reporter round tables, interviews, etc. only and did not cover either house of Congress.

I appreciate C-SPAN now and watch programs on it often.

Sincerely,
