

September 8, 1994

In my long life I never remember one president inheriting 12 years of another party's downhill neglect, and then receiving nothing but criticism, no matter which way he turned. Then he is expected to turn fifteen ways at once and solve all the world problems--and I do mean the world--also, to do it at once, without a single mistake.

I firmly expect to read any day now that Bill Clinton wet his panties in the first grade and that Congress is making a full investigation.
