

Dear Brian,

Just a few lines I want to start out with to refresh your memory as to who I am. You and I met about 3 years ago on a subway train in N.Y.C.

You got on the 49th station to board an "R" train and you were on your way to 146th Street. I think you will recall we had a nice conversation.

What I am writing you about is a movie that opened recently called "The Enemy at the Gates." Back in the mid 70's I was the foreman in a parking garage on the upper East Side. A fellow by the name of Bill Craig used to park his car there occasionally.

We became very friendly, and he informed me that he had just had a novel published entitled "The Enemy at the Gates" a novel about the battle of Stalingrad.

Why I am writing to you Brian is that I know that you have a book program on C Span, and I was wondering if the movie was adapted from Bill Craig's novel, and if you had any information about his whereabouts.

Thanking you for any help you might be.

yours truly
