Dear Sir:

I am astonished you permitted one hour of unrebutted air time to one, David Brock, so-called investigative reporter of The American Spectator, to say nothing of the endless reruns.

Acknowledged - the "moderator" (what was to moderate?) announced that a representative of the Clinton Administration had been invited to attend, declined and the audience was subjected to a virtual monologue that basically perpetrated a "high tech lynching" not only on Bill and Hillary Clinton, but also, the deceased, Vincent Foster. Mazel Tov, Mr. Lamb.

Surely you knew Brock's controversial and to some, unsavory, reputation, stemming from, among other things, The Real Anita Hill, yet you permitted Brock unfettered, unchallenged access to a vast audience, permitting him to spew his vitriol, providing no antidote; certainly not from the catatonic "moderator".

Whatever the merits of the Clintonian rumors/allegations, I am appalled by your singular lack of judgment, fairness, taste, balance and decency.

Wittingly or unwittingly (I'll give you the benefit of the doubt, being a fair person), you are complicit in a deed most foul, noxious and anathema.

Since this reeks of Joe McCarthy, I am reminded of his nemesis' courageous statement, which I direct to you: "Have you no shame, sir?"

Ah....a story idea for you Mr. Lamb. Find a David Brock clone and dig up unsubstantiated, undefended, alleged and salacious dirt on the late, great, honorable, Judge Joseph R. Welch and air it without checks and balances.
