Dear Brian,

OK, so I sprayed the paper with perfume. I know it's hokey, but I wanted to get your attention. I've never done this before - honest! - but I saw your picture in the Washingtonian and I had to write. You have a most uncommonly attractive smile.

You and I share an affection for country music. I admire your courage in admitting it to the world. I am also an avid reader - mostly mysteries at the moment. My greatest passion though is traveling. I can't get enough. I also enjoy opera and would probably like classical music. I'm learning to play golf.

It sounds as though you may be a workaholic. I've always worked, but I'm not a high powered career woman. I have many of my own interests (solitary, like reading), so I get along best with a "weekend husband" type like you.

I'm upbeat and positive, at ease on a hike or a French gourmet dinner (I used to live in Paris), and get along with everyone. I'm very attractive and appealing, and just the right amount of years younger than you.

I confess I've never watched C-span, but I'd love to see your show. Call and let me know when its on?
