I have been a reviewer of Washington Journal now for about 5 years now and recently there has been something happening that has me concerned.

I used to call time and time again when there was something I wanted to add or ask of your guests. After calling over and over again, I would finally get a signal that would tell me the phone was ringing. Then, I knew there would not be long before the phone would be answered. The last 10-12 times I've gotten through to ring, the phone would ring and ring. These were times well past the 30 days you ask that a caller wait between calls while I've heard voices many times that do not wait that long between calls.

You don't know how frustrated I can get, at times, when there is someone on your program spouting out nothing but a party line. Is it some new policy of yours to ignore the good faith calls of a regular viewer or do you have people manning the phones who are so inept that they can't answer the phones, or do they have my number and caller I. D. with instructions to ignore any call I may make? I don't call outside of my political persuasion, the subjects I want to speak on are ones, people on your station say, read in a magazine, read in the paper, think of in my mind, or a combination of parts of them. When I call and 4-5 times in a morning the same thing happens, I do start to wonder. Used to be, when I called and got through someone would ask me where I was from, was I a conservative or a liberal. Then they would place me on a waiting line until one of the answerers could take my ~~for~~^{call}. I wonder what has gone on. I'm sure that the person who takes the prelim. calls has plenty of time to answer.

I have no reason to do anything other than to wonder is there something on? I can only surmise that certain people are being targeted to participate.

What do you call a streetperson in Venice Italy?

Sincerely,
