Dear Bryan Lamb:

Everyone at C-Span is doing a terrific job, however, I have a recommendation to make in regard to programming such as the "Violence in schools" on November 14th, 1992.

Only one girl was scheduled to be on the panel and she was unable to show up. It would have been better to have scheduled three girls so as to have both sides equal. If one girl or boy didn't show up it still would have been a much better balanced panel.

I get very tired of hearing about statements that schools should teach about Black, Spanish, Jewish or other cultures. I wish that all those who host the various programs explain that this is not possible as it would result in discrimination against other cultures. There are so many different cultures in this country that it would be discriminatory to teach about a select few. Most people came to this country from Europe but many also came from other countries. I as well as others whose parents came from different countries are just as entitled to be taught about "Our" culture. I am ready to start screaming about the people who talk about equality in one breath and then look for special treatment in the next breath.

The public libraries are full of books about different cultures. Those who want to learn about their cultures badly enough can do what I and many others have done and that is to go to the public library.

I have one other complaint and that is about gays. What gays do is their own business, but everyone is forgetting that what they do is really a "Behavioral Lifestyle" and they should not get any special recognition for their lifestyle. Lets not forget that if they are given special recognition then we will be open to requests from all other groups who have kinky or different lifestyles.

I will appreciate it if you will pass this letter around to others at C-Span.

Yours truly,
