Re: the US Constitution

I don't understand what the big deal is about understanding the Constitution of the United States. If one takes in consideration the following, it becomes quite simple:

- The history of the colonies-to-date
- The public manners practiced by the elite of that day
- The polite language practiced by the elite of that day
- The general family history of each who worked on the Constitution
- An analysis of the writings of each of them
- What was written about each of them
- A complete knowledge of all the debates and drafts (preferably the originals ~~just~~ just for pure fun)
- Who was friend with whom and influenced by whom
- The general atmosphere of the day and the psychology of the people

2 (memo re: Constitution)

- what ideas divided them; what held them together
- then read the Constitution with all of the above in mind.

It wouldn't take more than 10, 15 or no more than 25 years to get to that first reading for most people. At that time, one could ask GOD for a major throwdown of wisdom in a manner understandable to them. Then, after the second, third, maybe fourteenth reading, it is done and the understanding is complete with the possibility that one is replete with mis^{might interfere}understanding as the understanding of another if the understanding of another is different than the understanding gleaned afore in light of the understanding deemed in the first instance after that last reading.

Even though I have done none of the above, I lay claim the Right of every other citizen and just read it in portions I choose, and understand it as it pleases me at that time.
