

Dear Mrs Armstrong,

2/16/91

Since you were kind enough to reply to my first letter I've decided to give you some more good advice.

The recent "Keating 5" hearings have amply demonstrated the need for campaign financing reform. I'm afraid there will be a big push made to give "limited" government funds to each candidate for campaign financing. As with all government financed activities, this approach will merely lead to "amply justified" cost of living increases as time goes on. Before long we'll have another gigantic political feeding trough.

Personally I feel a better approach would be to allow each candidate a free one page insert with the ballot. The candidate could use it to expound on his/her virtues or the faults of his/her opponents. I'm sure you'll agree that one page would be ample to describe the virtues of even the most worthy candidate.

I believe you could be of great service to the taxpayers if you could set up a series of programs that impartially compare the most attractive and alternatives to the present system. We has some time before the next elections and we sure do need a better system.

I can't think of a more unbiased group to illuminate this problem and focus public thinking.

Sincerely,
