Re: Ross Perot
via Elizabeth Drew

Dear Brian - I am one of your fans.
You're the best! (I thought your interview with Mr. Perot where he told his life story) was one of the best.

I tuned in late on your interview with The New Yorker correspondent. I've never cared for her because although she has a bright mind and writes well she is too opinionated to be truly wise. She doesn't hesitate to think she knows and wades right into complex subjects where she perhaps doesn't have the credentials (Psychology, e.g.)

Example: Ross Perot. Instead of doing what she purports: just reporting the facts, etc., she wades right into what makes Mr. Perot do what he does, his behavior and what motivates him and gives declarative answers, opinionated

I think it is in the area of a behavioral specialist to analyze and speculate about Mr. Perot's behavior.

No one ^(I think) has suggested what is so obvious. The man is a born leader. He is a Pied Piper. His call is fundamental to human nature: - wake up Americans, face reality, grow-up and take responsibility for your own government. Americans tend to be immature - to be hedonistic to want to avoid facing reality, 'Think' everything will be beautiful and someone else will work out the problems. Mr. Perot says NO! Reality: we are in a very dangerous situation. Our country is eroding and being destroyed. Wake up! Follow me! Together we can ^{will} resolve these problems. You can count on me to lead, but you must stay with me and do the work. It will be hard, unpleasant, and demand sacrifices from us all. This is the message individuals must hear and face if they are to mature and become adults. He ~~appeals~~ appeals to us to stop fighting (abortion, etc.)

Ms. Drew overlooks or does not mention the fact that American people trust Mr. Perot because of his very uprightness - his sterling character and his love for his fellow man. His warmth and love for people is obvious. He's proved it over and over by his deeds.

Mr. Perot is very bright - and he has proved he is capable by his own life and achievements.

Ms. Drew's cold-blooded analytical dicta are interesting, bright, carefully worked out but they mask the fact that she truly hates men. No man would fare well under her scrutiny, I feel.

Mr. Perot's money is important not only because it enables him to do what he thinks will help his fellow countryman, but because it proves to a money-worshipping country that he is a winner. He can do what he sets out to do. He is brave. He "bucks the system" and wins. Just what USA needs!

Sincerely

(age 83)

Brian - my C Span key ring broke - the plastic part. Is there one left over? I loved it.
