Sirs:

Don't let the greatest communication tool of the common people deteriorate into an open forum for hate mongers and egomaniacal, self-styled media pundits. Has it ever occurred to these experts that they are wrong and those they criticize are right? Number among the media the myriad Republicans, who live solely on a diet of sour grapes, and spew out their vinegary vitriol. While you're at it, consider, for immediate deletion from your daily introductions, words such as, pundit, expert, sophisticated, and other mind inflaters.

Words better suited to some of these media guests would be, pontificate, dogma, ex-cathedra (from the chair of Hearst, Scripts-Howard, CNN). I know these terms are straight out of the Vatican; but so were the terms, propaganda and infallibility. You might also caution them, not to take themselves so seriously.

I didn't vote for Bill Clinton; nor did I vote for George Bush; I was in the Perot group, yearning for a true representative of the people. But Clinton is the President and he sounds like he is genuinely for government of the people. Give him a chance!! The only one who was capable of immediate miracles, was nailed to a cross, as many of your guest experts are attempting to do to Bill Clinton, and especially Hilary. Have you forgotten Nancy Reagan, already?

If these experts have all the answers, let them jump in the next Presidential primary; we need one of them in the White House-desperately! In the meantime, let them, "lead, follow, or get the hell out of the way! If they are unwilling to do this, send them back to their cross-legged position, as resident guru on the mountain. Personally, I don't think they could stand the rigor of the mountain, or the White House.

Sincerely,

[Redacted Signature]
