

Sept. 26, 1997

Dear C-Span, ~~o. Promisekeeper~~

There are people in my area who have ways of telling me[?] that their children are better[!] than mine are because my children went to public schools. One of their children has been mowing my lawn for a few years. He does not do a very good job, he leaves long grass and weeds on the edges etc.

2.

He has had many jobs and is usually let go after a few days of work because he is not a good worker and he complains a lot.

His wife cleans peoples houses and appears to be a good worker. They need to have two cars because their children must go to a Christian school.

He boasts about being

3.

a "promise keeper" and he often leaves his family to go to one of their get-togethers. His wife must stay home and clean houses and keep track of the children.

Last week his wife mowed my grass because he has become "allergic" to grass.

Just my two-cents worth on "Promise keepers".

Once, I was talking to my Granddaughter about prospective Congressmen or Presidents.

I think they shouldn't promise anything.

If, for some reason things don't work out as planned, someone is there to say, "He Promised"!

Thank you for all of your good programming.

Sincerely,

