Dear Brian Lamb:

I wish you would have a workshop sometime on why Liberals are so terrified of conservatives. I really want to know.

I watch Journalists Roundtable on Friday morning and I have noticed your tilt toward the left. For instance, there are ALWAYS two liberal journalists to one conservative, and last Friday there were three liberals and no conservative so a hope of balance in that $1\frac{1}{2}$ hours was out of the question. Perhaps you were nervous because Rush Limbaugh was scheduled for later that morning and you were afraid of what your liberal friends would say.

You have one host--or should I say hostess--who would have been unflappable. That is the attractive red-head--is it Connie? I'm not sure of her name but she is 24-carat-gold-in the interview department. She asks hard questions, is forthright and to the point, and does not appear intimidated by any of your guests, no matter how highly they think of their own opinions. She gives C-Span real class, and I wish she were doing more news programs.

I would like to comment on Eleanor Clift, also, as she really should register herself as a propaganda agent for the Clintons, as a journalist she is not. Perhaps you did not catch her during the campaign where she slavered over candidate Clinton in a rather strange way, referring to him as "the hunk", "beefcake" and "raw meat", which gave the impression she was more of a groupie than a newswoman. I was embarrassed for her and wondered how her husband reacted. You have had him on C-Span also. But Eleanor has lacked credibility ever since the campaign because she is so ga-ga over the President.

I do like C-Span and appreciate all you have done for our country. You have changed news reporting forever and for the good. I thank you for all I have learned since our cable company put you on many years ago. I only hope you will be able to remain neutral in the reporting of the political arena, you are the only really fair network but sometimes you slip a little yourself.

However, you will have to admit that a liberal will never appear by himself against a conservative--he must have at least one other liberal to back him up, which only shows how fragile his philosophy really is. I have seen one conservative pitted against 6 liberals on PBS and take them in stride.

I hope you read this letter and at least think about it. Thanks.
