Dear Sir/Madame:

After watching the arrogant, sanctimonious performance of "Luis," "Louis," or whatever his name was this morning on your early show, I felt compelled to write. His self-satisfied smug look was a major gag when other liberals called in to compliment him on standing firm for what he believed. What he believes is that America "owes" everyone anything they think they are entitled to receive at the expense of others. He needs to study AMERICAN history...not the revisionist's version, but the true one. Up until the time FDR, LBJ, and others of their ilk started giving away the kitchen sink, Americans worked and earned what they had. No one is entitled to anything in this country, except life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness, and that includes children. If the representative from Illinois is so concerned about children, he should start by protecting them in the womb.

Americans are one of the most generous people in the world if left to their own choices. I would no more walk by ANY child in need than I would walk by MY child in need. The give away program by the federal government has undermined this spirit of giving that has been a distinct characteristic of Americans. No wonder the private charities say they cannot fund the change's congress wants to make...Americans are so taxed to pay for the programs imposed upon us by the "compassion" of our elected officials, there is barely enough left over to take care of our own families. Those same programs have also led Americans to believe that others are being taken care of by government....so there.

IT IS OVER. Liberalism is dead...conservatism and true compassion are back. The kind where there is a hands on approach by individuals and communities; not the feel good kind embraced by the left. It is only a matter of time. Inch by inch, mile by mile, we are going to restore a sense of decency, virtue, and absolutes, along with individual rights, which are the only things that will save this nation.

I am also tired of Republicans backing down every time a Democrat sneezes at them. They consistently allow them to define the debate. If the Republicans only knew that we are hungry for someone to stand by the hard choices and not run for cover or compromise everytime they are called names, they would be on the road for a long reign in public service. As it now stands, I might well vote for an independent or libertarian the next time around. I am over the spineless wonders who say they are representing the conservative point of view. As Florence King, a woman who is as cynical as I, says, "I have no use for the cowardly ...Gumplicans who think conservatism consists of a philistine bray instead of a stentorian roar." Now there's a woman who would stand by her man while baking cookies.

Thank you for letting me sound off. I consistently tune in to C-Span. However, I have to agree with one of the callers this morning...someone...anyone...should have shut the mealy-mouth liberal up.
