

January 11, 1994

Dear Brian Lamb,

You and your anchors, plus all media and press have been criticized for talking about George H. W. Bush after the date of his mother's death, and during her funeral. (Double standard liberals)

During the campaign of 1992 President Bush's mother was seriously ill and died. The Democrat, Bill Clinton, Al Gore, the press and media went right on saying terrible things about our President, and hardly mentioned the death of his mother. About 10 minutes on CNN criticized the traffic jam caused by the many cars of the people attending the funeral.

There were no comments about what a wonderful life of service this very elderly person had lived. It was disgraceful the way our President and his family was treated, and no one complained, and only a few noticed.

Sincerely,

[REDACTED]
