Dear Sirs:

Have you no programming brains? I would watch your Moscow news re-broadcasts if I did not have to listen to some incompetent who cannot speak decent, intelligible English stumbling over his/her attempt at a simultaneous translation of Russian.

A network with more intelligence would run an English translation along the bottom of the screen, allowing the original to remain in Russian--- which would also be of benefit to those attempting to improve their spoken Russian.

Of course it is possible that you think that none of your viewers are advanced enough to learn Russian, and/or that the vast majority of them cannot even read English. Is that the explanation for the stupidly unsatisfactory way you run this program?

Sincerely,
