Dear Mr. Brian Lamb:

In the past few days I have learned a lot more than I ever expected to know about that girlish-faced Connie Chung now married to Morely and never mind the spelling of names, please, until I get a VCR for my electronic listening post.

My four years in the Orient in my younger life tuned my eye to catch the neat oriental woman. I am always happy to see them, even in the sterile-isolation of today's electronic TV world.

Which brings me to the Honorable Dennis Skinner, member of the British House of Commons, and your interview with him on the 25th of August.

There is something about the way you conduct your interviews that, for me, brings out from your guests their real character.

I have no problem relating to Mr. Skinner, and found in him much that I admire.

Again, a few days ago I found myself uncomfortable at spots with your session with Ross Perot.

I got a kick out of the way your supporting staff appeared in this interview, a real plus showing that the very polished C-SPAN can, in a situation, improvise completely unabashed.

When you and Ross unexpectedly seemed to clash a few times I was caused to wonder how come? And I am still wondering why. Was this the real Brian Lamb; the real Ross Perot? Or is there some sort of hidden meaning here for me to seek out?

I have my reservations about Mr. Perot, in his ability to gather a consensus, so essential in running a government.

As to Ross the CEO, neither you or I can doubt his ability.

But as a national leader, he seems to have a submerged arrogance that is not at all well hidden.

I must get a VCR for my exclusive use; our VCR is in the family TV room. Only then will I be able to carefully study programs to better understand their meanings.

I am one of your most devoted fans for cause; for being the CEO of such a complex smooth-running outfit, for being a top moderator/interviewer, and for bringing us such interesting and valuable programs.

Thank you for your attention.
