MEDIA REPRESENTATIVES FROM NEW YORK-BASED PUBLICATIONS
DISCUSS LIBEL AND NEWS ON C-SPAN INTERVIEWS

WASHINGTON, D.C.--Libel and "the business of news" will be the topics discussed each week night, February 11 - 16, when C-SPAN airs a series of five interviews with top executives of major New York-based publications.

Beginning Monday, February 11 at 10:00 pm est, C-SPAN will air the first in the series of the network's taped one-hour interviews. Scheduled guests throughout the week on C-SPAN's nightly interviews include:

- * Henry Grunwald, editor-in-chief of Time, Inc.
- * Richard Smith, editor-in-chief of Newsweek
- * David Schneiderman, acting publisher of Village Voice
- * Sydney Schanberg, columnist for The New York Times and author of Death and Life of Dith Pran, basis for the movie "The Killing Fields"
- * Edward Cony, vice president for news, Dow Jones and Co., Inc.,
(The Wall Street Journal)

"The value of the interviews," says C-SPAN President Brian Lamb, "is that every night viewers will be able to hear executives of the print media talk about today's press." C-SPAN's morning viewer call-in program is devoted to the discussion of daily newspapers and the news of the day with political journalists based in Washington D.C. -- the nation's political capital. C-SPAN has produced this special series of interviews in an effort to provide a news perspective from New York City -- the news media capital of the nation.

C-SPAN's interviews were taped in conjunction with the network's coverage of the International Radio and Television Society Conference, February 6 - 8, scheduled to air the weekend of February 15 - 17. C-SPAN is currently seen in over 20 million homes nationwide via 2,000 affiliated cable systems.
