Dear Bryan,

I think I have a kind of answer
to your question to the British Ambassador.

It's Queen Elizabeth

King George

Prince Charles

& Sir John - why not?

That's the way titles go - like Sir Winston, too.

I say this as the granddaughter
of Sir [REDACTED] ([REDACTED]) of the [REDACTED] of "Esk: Esk" is in the N.W. corner of England near the border of Scotland. (My grandfather ^{married} a girl from Albany & lived in Brooklyn until his death.)

O.BRITS

I've been to England a number of times, but never to Esk. But even just a few years ago, we still were listed in [REDACTED] including the names of my three children. My father was the fourth son, and the "title" now rests with the son of the second son, since the son of the first son had only daughters. (Alas!!!)

There never was any recent financial inheritance involved with the title, and in our generation in the States it was considered more of a joking thing. My father said "All the money is in the Bank of England."

Thanks for C-Span - and all that! And bring back the messia during the House votes.  Sincerely,

* Please!
