Dear Mr. Lamb,

I want to thank you for the programming you have had lately, especially for Booknotes and the series on Think Tanks. As a computer scientist, it was nice to see a real scientist during your interview for Cuckoo's Egg.

During one of the Think Tank programs one of the speakers mentioned the computer modeling his group was doing. I've wondered if one of the reasons the economy has held up as well as it has for the last eight years is somewhat due to the economic modeling that has been used. The subject is a rather esoteric one but could you build a program around computer modeling the government is using for determining policy?

Thank you,
