Let's be fair

TO THE EDITOR:

Coincidental with Black History Month, the "living legend of Nelson Mandela" was dramatically portrayed to the world with sanctified moral vindication and sympathetic emotion.

Excellent media coverage, just wonderful!

Now, let's be fair (First Amendment) and consider some logical assumptions which have been diplomatically withheld, in order not to offend.

Nelson Mandela is extra exceptionally "lucky" to simply be alive under a government that has been described, for years, as "the most repugnant, abhorrent, heinous, evil regime on earth" (maybe second only to Ethiopia).

I mean, he's truly lucky, because the Mandela legend would not be alive if he had committed the same offenses against most black governments receiving United States Foreign Aid (PAY ATTENTION, Congressman Howard Wolpe).

Contrary to popular emotion unopposed propaganda, South Africa is not a target for revolution solely because of oppression or apartheid. If those reasons were creditable, then many black governments would be harshly sanctioned for tribal "ethnic" apartheid, and receive unrelenting harassment for their excessive inhuman oppression and irrational killing of their people by the thousands!

South Africa is a selected special target of the UDF, ACP and ANC leadership because of its enormous mineral wealth, successful agricultural program, advanced industrial complex, strategic geo-military advantage, and the economic POWER it wields over all of Southern Africa.

And, it is also a natural target of our Afro-American leadership because the ruling unique Afrikaner Tribe is white and favors traditional separate tribal cultures.

South Africa is a "precious jewel" that is enviously sought after by covetous black power leaders who, for various reasons, did not possess the stubborn willpower and "sustained drive" (over three centuries) to produce a relatively self-sufficient advanced African nation.

If the foregoing is labeled racism, then suspend me without pay!
