

O-impeach

[REDACTED]
DeSoto, Texas, 75115
December 11, 1998

Dear Mr. Jones,

My husband is a frequent listener to your show. I was riding with him one day last week when you did a show on the president. I personally believe that everyone is entitled to ones opinion. That is ones right as well as mine. I don't have to agree with their opinion and they don't have to agree with mine. It appears that everyone does have an opinion on whether or not the president is guilty of a crime. I don't think so. The president committed a sin.

One doesn't have to be a Rocket Scientist to figure out that someone is determine to get the president out of office by any means necessary. One doesn't have to know anything about the constitution to know that a citizen, any citizen should have some degree of privacy in their life. One doesn't have to know anything about politics to know that if Kenneth Starr had found any other evidence of wrongdoing by the president he wouldn't have stooped so low to bring him down.

We've already had an Oliver North this century. I was not impressed by the soft spoken, good old American Boy Scout appearance of Mr. Starr. Anybody that exposed the graphic details of another person's sexual activities to the public is no Boy Scout. To publicize such information was outrageous behavior on the part of the Starr team. The investigation got out of control. The impeachment hearings in my opinion is self serving and a show of arrogance on the part of the Republicans to get the president out of office no matter what it takes or what the American people think. If we are to prosecute politicians for lying, then everyone on the Hill should pack up and get out. It doesn't matter how we slice it a lie is a lie, whether it is to the Grand Jury, the American People or your family. If one makes a promise to do something they never do, that is a lie. Yes the president may have lied under oath as every politician does when they raise their hand to take office. If lying under oath makes the president a criminal then it should also make everyone else a criminal. Fair is fair.

The American people didn't have a right to know the sexual activities of the president. No one should have the right to invade a person's private life unless there was a charge of rape, which is a crime. The questions should never have been asked. How would you feel if someone would question you about intimate details of your sexual activities and then post them for the world to see? I shouldn't have to know your sexual habits to determine if you are a good radio personality or not. I believe someone is so desperate to get the president that no one has stopped to see where this is taking us. Are we now expected to vote for someone on the bases of their sexual habits instead of voting for a person because we believe they would do a good job as president? Do we ask if they would ever lie about whether or not they were a bed wetter or anything that would embarrass us later on? If we are to hold to the idea that the president should be a role model for our children, does that mean he must be perfect and never make any mistakes? So our children can grow up knowing they must be perfect because we the people will tolerate nothing less. Will every president from this time forward be expected to give an accurate account of his actions, whether public or private and pray that no one else have a different version? Are we prepared to impeach every president that has one version of his sexual activity and someone else has another? Where are we going with this, he said, she said business?

In my opinion William Clinton is the greatest president that ever lived, whether he is impeached or not. There isn't one person on Capitol Hill that could stand the intensified investigation by one of the top prosecutors in the country and the only thing he could come up with is he said she said. That's REMARKABLE whether you like him or not. I'm praying that he and his family can recover. May God Bless You,
Jeannette Norman