--Another in the Network's Behind the Scenes Look at the News Media--

WASHINGTON, D.C.-- C-SPAN takes a week-long look at The New Republic from the weekly public opinion magazine's Washington-based headquarters. Beginning March 31, C-SPAN plans to devote more than 10 program hours examining the magazine--the people behind it, what they do, and what they think about what they do.

C-SPAN programs from The New Republic include: 1) C-SPAN's LIVE morning journalism call-in programs, 2) a LIVE roundtable discussion with senior editors, 3) interviews with The New Republic's publisher and contributing editor, and 4) a weekly editorial meeting.

"We are looking forward to a week of lively exchanges and discussions between our viewers and the people who put the magazine together," says program producer Eileen Quinn. "Our goal is to give viewers an in-depth look at the magazine and the opportunity to directly question The New Republic's decision-makers," she added.

C-SPAN's periodic behind-the-scenes look at national magazines and newspapers offers viewers an insight to the workings of the news media. By focussing on the fourth estate C-SPAN continues its commitment to public affairs programming.
