RE: The Russert Interview

RE: C-SPAN at the Cross-roads

Dear Mr. Lamb:

What a shame that there aren't those without auto-redials to balance out this sort of fawning. The Russerts are emblematic of precisely why the republic is in the throes of a gigantic press crisis ---unlikely to be resolved without some kind of heroic action (not on the horizon). Ben Stein said it well: what you see in front of the screen (all sorts) is what goes on behind it. The pair of "journalists" are so far removed from better people outhere---culturally and in all other ways---that one shudders. At least this grinning Cheshire Cat fellow admits it (in theory).

He says hishypocrisy about schools stems from not wanting "to experiment" with his son's life. But, he does every minute! Beyond question, he and spouse would never own a nasty old gun (even if illegal in DC, Blather Dan, the Gunga One, has a shotgun) to use if a thug invaded their no doubt well-guarded domicile. They would beg, grovel and finally die without a whimper. That is the initial mode of being far removed from the bulk of Americans, who have firearms in their homes (about half of all places by both sides' estimates). Tim and wife would never lower themselves to defending their own lives (what elitist does?). That, surely, will be the legacy to lil' Lukie, unless something miraculous appears. The no-longer-disputable-as-desideratum domestic disarmament continuum of the Left (which these two are indisputable part of) is to be imposed on a reluctant populace, per their wishes. (more)

That is an obscenity, but ~~de~~ rigueur (look that up in your French Funk & Wagnall's). In working for the biggest unmoored gasbag-sot in the land, Timmie took on his doctrinaire hue. Overwhelmingly, in mainline journalism, the males lack essential manhood; the broads are without basic compassion. And it all revolves around the self-defense controversy (wrongly called "gun control"). But, no matter, as there will be no new Volstead Act. The LBJ crowd could not bring it off, so all that is done by ^u backing up ^{"to"} the most anti-Constitutionalist administration thus far is: the sales of more guns; the enlisting of more NRA members (in spite of a 30-year demonization putsch against NRA); and, a hardening of our resolve to see this kind of decadent individual carted off in their own pre-Tocquevillian technicolor tumbrels. Symbolically, naturally. No harm.

These putzes (Celtic) think they are in tune with freedom. How did they inhale the April 7, 1997 story in The New Yorker about Eugenio (unclean Genio) Pacelli and the Silent One (Silent Kal), Wojtyla? What a "pisher-in-the-kisher," as Goldhagen would say, about the most anti-Semitic entity ever! A pair of braindead quasi-religionists (no letup on artificial birth-control, friends) are out of it. What a classic of the foul ^{bequest} ~~#####~~ of the Sick 1960s. Horowitz pens it on-target.

What sustains the decent watchers of our ^{national} decline is the falling ratings of the most scandalous robber barony to date in any modestly free state. I wish to live to see what C-SPAN has begun, ie, some sort of guaranteed access (not compulsion to publish) right to rebut squids like the twin shmucks (Iranian) on this day.

Soon, you are to toady to someone far more pitiable than contemptible. I speak of the buffoon, Uncle Walter the Krankheit (look that up in your Yiddisher Lexicon). He began as a shill for the Pentagon in narrating its propa--films, then segued to the anti-defense side of CBS. The final bit of idiocy was Cronkite's thoughts to Helen Caldicott in Missile Envy, wherein this cretin said we should unilaterally disarm, and lie in front of Russian tanks. Pausing about 30 seconds to upchuck, one wag said "about 35 mph in low gear" to Cronk's imbecilic statement that we would go unharmed, for "What could they do!?" No doubt that is illustrative of what the people have borne as a millstone (and without knowing it) for too long. Until you are able to question this crawen milksop in a way modestly reflective of a sound "Booknotes" manner, please assign both the job of choosing books to another; and, giving your job to a person of neutrality. In short, pal, you are part of the problem now that you have inhaled the DC ^{air/}crud. Ah, no? That is understandable when we saw you actually brag about using the first book review for Richard Barnett of IPS. That is an offense beyond the reckoning. IPS is a treasonous enclave but above the fray. A Libertarian speaks the truth.

No sense belaboring further this simpleton's final days; you might read the Dec. 6, 1966 review by Joe Queenan in the WSJ to find out what a real pro thinks. To misreport TET (see a ream of books) may well be Cronk's epitaph. And it is certain you will be as brown-nosing as ever in rejection that, too. You can't buy friends, dollink-boy. All you do is ~~Y88888~~ even further this slide into mediocrity.

This line-selection is further proof that you want to put your quaint Easter-Bunny worldview on the best call-in show extant on TV (radio does it all better). Why not a line for those without redial?

What about a place for those who write in with their resumes. No, not PHDs from a college, but someone who flew over Nam---or, better yet---suffered in a Cong camp (I knowone) and then heard your buddy Barnet speak to themfrom Hanoi, you shit.

It all stops with you Dad.

Nice job in "backing up" to the White House on editing out the Imus rerun. What was the payoff there? No shots of the "Arkansas Ass-Bandit" and spouse in denial and agitation. Buttoboy for Georgie Skatapoulos.

By the way, what will Jones tell about Bubba's ying-yang? Is it an "anteater," or a "helmet"? Well, to be more precise, a "crewneck" or a "turtle-neck"?

PBS and NPR will be the targets for a class action suit for access. Our airwaves, our money. You snicker, but the DC courts listened quite seriously to the counter-editorials of a war-protestors' faction in the unpleasantness in SE Asia. And, allowed one before the thing was denied in the high court. It is on the horizon, be assured.

Eric Hoffer, forklift philosopher, summed it up: When is made cowardice ~~#####~~ respectable, it becomes easily a fashion. Our craven chattering class is fun to observe, however. Nemesis follows hubris.

note: in a better world, the lice at the netnews centers would have been jailed (CBS' "Project Nassau" for one). What kind of company would have Mighty Mouse snort a line of white stuff?!
