Dear Mr. Murphy:

Debate participation does not truly reflect the democratic process. The debates are dominated by the two major parties and excludes third party/independent party candidate participation. Major party candidates have much greater access to free media exposure, which is a major criterion upon which entrance to the debates is given. However, the purpose of the debates is to inform and educate the voters about the candidates and their positions, so all candidates should be included.

The only criterion for appearing in the debates should be ballot access, which is significantly more difficult for independent/3rd party candidates than for the Republican and Democratic parties. I think that if a candidate is on the ballot he/she has a right to be heard and therefore be included in the presidential debates.

I am asking you to include Dr. John Hagelin, who has practical solutions to the nation's problems, in the debates. Dr. Hagelin, a Harvard graduate, represents the Natural Law Party, with about 75 candidates running for Federal office. The Natural Law Party has gained ballot access in 28 states now, and may have access to 35 by the election. He should have equal access to prime time media.

Could you please send a direct request to include Dr. Hagelin in the debates, to:

Frank J. Fahrenkopf, Jr., & Paul G. Kirk, Jr., Co-Chairmen
Commission on Presidential Debates
