C-SPAN: One professor's cup of tea

Re: "C-SPAN: The Little Network That Could" [July 18]. Twice I've had the privilege of working with C-SPAN at civil rights conferences broadcast from Ole Miss. At one, Brian Lamb was present, demonstrating unpretentious, level-headed leadership both on and off the set. The behind-the-scenes crew of young people was fantastic—clean-cut, truly professional, and hard-working. The token C-SPAN mugs I received provide a warm remembrance of a pleasant experience.

Prof. Kenneth Bender
University, Miss.

C-SPAN has made me politically aware as no other information source ever has or could, and in the most painless way. It makes government-watching interesting.

This summer I'm living in an area where cable-TV is not an option. To be without C-SPAN for eight weeks, election year or not, was unthinkable, so I rented a satellite dish. I'm addicted, you see.

Free speech? Just dial 1-900...

Once again media hypocrisy raises its ugly head. In "TV Update" [July 25], you state that a Time Warner-owned company would not carry ads for callers to listen to Gennifer Flowers' conversations with Bill Clinton. Meanwhile, this same corporation cites freedom of speech when Ice-T raps "Cop Killer."
