Established in 1990 as a major alternative to the large, commercial publishing houses, The New Press is the first full-scale nonprofit book publisher outside of the university presses. The press is operated editorially in the public interest, rather than for private gain; it is committed to publishing in innovative ways works of educational, cultural, and community value that, despite their intellectual merits, might not be "commercially" viable. The New Press's editorial offices are located at the City University of New York.
