To C-Span -

Yawn. No Hum.

I'm sorry we disturbed the Republicans so much by the success of our Democratic Convention. It was a real model of what a Convention should be, and that was also mainly due to the fact that we have two superior and excellent candidates.

But this is a sobering letter.

As I listened, at times, to the vilification, personal attacks, and right wing rhetoric, and as I looked out, via the camera, at the crowd of country club faces, I felt a sense of pity, not for them so much, as for our country. We are in such disarray.

It occurred to me too, that instead of wondering if we should be the world's policeman, we might also be concerned about America becoming more of a police state.

I want to be optimistic, but this is a frightened divided country, and that isn't a good sign.

Even should Governor Bill Clinton and Senator Al Gore win, and I hope they do, those other snakes are not going to be defanged, nor will they crawl back to their luxurious holes behind the rocks.

They're a bunch of cry babies and sore losers, and they don't care if they take the country down with them.

They don't worry too much about facts, issues, or the truth for that matter, as they try to re-define us and our candidates, and even our country and the world.

I bother to write because I'm concerned mainly about the children, and what's been happening to them; us too. It's unforgiveable. Very Truly Yours,
