Hi, Brian, again

I'm writing to the rebroadcast of you & TR, SD & BS. You're showing the clip of Tim with RD & that Clinton guy, & after the latter made that little joke about Darman speaking for 1 or 2 minutes, it made me wonder if, when someone gets interrupted via a sarcastic dig, ~~if~~ it's better to just ignore it. Would it depend on the content, or no matter ^{would it be better to} what, just act like you didn't hear it. Do they wish they could ^{always} do that, & is it temper & anger & that makes them respond?

I was thrilled to see ~~to~~ all my St. Louis heros on C-SPAN yesterday. I wish I knew how you decided who would be on. Knox is a big deal in SL, but Duggan & Hartmann's popularity is more limited (not to me, of course; & did you know that?) & thus I was really surprised to see them.

Brennan brought your name up, & the C-SPAN guy said you were the head of C-SPAN

& then he paid you a big compliment by saying you took staff members out to lunch on Thursdays. My immediate reaction was: 1) Oh my God, all these letters I've written like he's had time to read them; 2) I knew he didn't look like a snob; 3) Thank God for C-SPAN.

As ever,

P.S. I guess I've written that I always pay attention to the NAP (non audio part when the camera is on you but no voices), & watching it for the 2nd time with SD making some point that everyone else was involved in or paying attention to makes me want to know what it was.
