Brian Lamb.

I have observed a strange Orwellian phenomenon occurring on your morning interview program, concerning Rush Limbaugh. Many of your guests dismiss him as being, at best, a forgettable ignoramus, or (swiftly following) a dangerous fascist, racist, sexist etc. Presumably dismayed by his burgeoning success, some have lately turned on his listeners, describing them as being as above, and red-necked know-nothings to boot.

The guests all either state, or agree with your callers who state that C-Span is the only viewing sanctuary for (or is it the sanctuary for only) those who are reflective, contemplative, open minded folk, well read and well informed, who want (with Sgt. Friday) only the facts, m'dam, and will draw our own conclusions, free from spin, thank you.

I note that a discernable fraction of your viewers - well, callers anyway,
are dittoheads.

How can the above viewer/listener
characterizations both be true?
