To Brian Lamb,
you and C-Span are the greatest, and I happen to be one of those progressives and free thinkers some allude to.
Anyway, some views on aspects of the current scene:

We are awash in ex-Republican Presidents.
They seem to have a grim determination to hang in there, even tho one of them was shot and once fell off his horse on his head, another kept falling down airplane steps, and the other resigned in disgrace.

But this last one, Bush, has really been an expensive nuisance.

Why did he have to go traipsing off to Kuwait, that bastion of Democracy, and probably at public expense?

His main solutions have been wars and more wars, his motivations revenge, and an ongoing obsession with the wily Saddam.

I've often wondered and mulled over why the voters would elect this man after his dirty tricks Willie Horton campaign.

And guess what? Listening to C-Span has provided me with an answer and turned on the light:

You keep getting these calls from tiny hamlets tucked away in out of the way corners or up in the mountains where feudin' fussin' and fighten' have been the norm, and arguments are settled with a gun.

Looking back, our country was settled by indentured servants, convicts, and religious cults and fanatics. And a whole bunch of Tories to "keep them in their place," tho it turned out the ones kept in their place first were the original inhabitants, the Indians. It's a sad commentary, but have things REALLY changed that much?
