To Whom It May Concern:

I am a confessed C-Span junkie and look forward for Monday mornings with Breen Lamb. I also enjoy journalists Roundtable. Now I must admit there are a few things that turn me and my T. V. off.

I'm one of those people who still exercise their ability to push the off button. (I detest T.V. anyway.)

As an aside to Mr. Lamb and those who conduct the journalists at the table ^{table} why don't you have more ^{black} conservative or Republican speakers on C-Span. I think you are very errant² in this respect.

There are many wonderful black speakers of moderate political persuasion but you insist on bringing on blacks from the Wash. Post and Wash. based liberals. There was once of on Crossfire shortly after the election was over a very lovely credible articulate ^{black} woman out of Stanford Univ. who was formerly on Pres. Bush's staff. I wish I could remember her name (it was an odd first name) but she was so good, so poised and so intelligent I never did forget her. There are many black Republicans out there and either you don't wish to have them on C-Span in which case I'm led to believe you are biased and lean toward liberals.

The second thing is these Cackawomie people who call. Most people are pretty well informed and speak well.

The ones I can't stand are the raspy voiced yellow dog demons who call and the females with their tiny little voices who think Clinton can do no wrong but will vilify any Republican or as they did Nixon.

Don't these morons who call realize that all they're stating is their political preference and nothing else. Most of your calls come from California (the highest concentration of illiterates in the country) and from Florida about which I can only say, ugh! Tell someone to get on the ball!
 Truly,
